ROBE...
 Mme. Schiaparelli
 her miniature hats expected thing for fall... even if the world doesn't come round to her way of thinking until a couple of years later. But leading Paris milliners are beginning to swing over to the doll hat, which is just about as big as its name signifies.

Fashion experts say that the tiny hat must come for two reasons: One is the definite advent of the pineapple coiffure which sweeps everything upward; the other is the necessity for a more easily portable hat owing to modern travel ways. You can't park in and out of airplanes—am yourself in crowded subways with a broad-brimmed in the way.

Letting down to details, these microscopic hats are trimmed most invariably with ribbon bows or feathers. And the ultimate note of smartness (as far Schiaparelli is concerned) is match "shocking" red lipstick with a "shocking" red-voyet bow perched on the front of a black hat.

Shapes vary from modified tricorne and bashed-in Tyrol-leans to little saucers with irregular rims, but they all take care to leave the entire back (and half the top) of the head completely uncovered. They all have a tendency to tip down well over the forehead or over one eye.

A little navy felt visored hat has a crown which is no more than quarter-moon shaped, thus allowing for any amount of curls on the top of the head.
 It is held on by a navy grosgrain back strap.

A miniature navy felt beret really stands on the right side of the head, while a ribbon is around the back of the head to hold the hat from falling off. A buffing machine makes a crease on the top ribbon makes a whole hat. And it is frequent.
