

Most Persons Are "Two-Faced" Says Optometrist Alden Smith

Recent studies of facial physiognomy disclose that the two sides of the average person's face are not symmetrical and that most persons are literally "two-faced" reports the Better Vision Institute. Usually the differences are subtle and not particularly noticeable, although they greatly affect the general facial appearance. One eye may be slightly smaller than the other, or perhaps a little higher in the forehead. Differences in cheek-bones, curvature of lips and shape of eye-brows are common.

In fitting spectacles, modern optometrists study carefully the facial contours and characteristics, and by clever shaping of lens areas are able to subdue irregularities in features. Because of this, many persons actually look better with glasses. Optical men can also, by varying the shape of the bases of spectacles, make a long nose appear shorter, lessen the roundness of a moon face, or reduce the apparent length of a long face.

And his words to the Romans are also presented: "O the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! how unsearchable are his judgments, and his ways past finding out! For who hath known the mind of the Lord? or who hath seen his counsel? For of him, and through him, and to him, are all things: to whom be glory for ever."
