Then next Monday, March 6, the 440 deputies will take the field actively, to work continuously until this year's assessment rolls are completed.

"I am instructing my deputies that one of the prime requisites of their work is to maintain absolute courtesy with the public," Quinn said. "Their school of instruction will have given them a thorough grounding in the technical requirements of their assessment work."

The current grant, Riley said, is about 14.5 percent less than was paid during the preceding year. Los Angeles county received $9,520.51 as its share of the apportionment.
