Sponsor of Peace Amendment Puts Congress on Spot

If war comes to Europe, a little coterie of 267 individuals in Washington can pitch us right into it. This is no fantastic thinking. As the grossly decreases, so must the nation go. The destinies of one hundred-thirty million people determined by a handful of men! Who are these vaunted persons, powerful enough to force upon us a declaration of war, to send us off to die and to kill, while they themselves are immune from military service? They are any 267 of the 681 members of Congress—a majority of House and Senate.

This unwise control over human life in a democracy is the heart of the argument forwarded by Congressman Ludlow in the March Good Housekeeping why his Peace Amendment—House Bill No. 89—should be written into the Constitution. The amendment would take away from Congress the power to declare war and give it over to the people for ratification. Under the set-up today the people have little to say about war except to die in it and pay for its cost.

Why should the war power be transferred to the people? asks Congressman Ludlow. "Because an antidote for war is democracy," he answers. "Woodrow Wilson spoke as with the voice of inspiration when he said that he had heard of governments making war on peoples, but never had he known of peoples making war on peoples." When the war power ceases to be in the hands of the few and is transferred to the people, the people themselves and to bear the unspeakable burdens and grief of war comprise the jury that will decide the question we shall begin to see the end of wars."

Congressman Ludlow warns that members of Congress are subject to a "thousand different kinds of influence and pressure that could not conceivably be brought to bear on the nation as a whole before it goes into war. And these very same members of Congress, he continues, are more or less under the domination of a single individual—that individual being whoever may be at any given time the President of the United States.

Congressman Ludlow also finds it deplorable that women have so little, so practically little, to say about war. In the present Congress, he says, "only five members are women. . . . To bring our boys into the world, why should they not have something to say as to whether their flesh and blood should be hurled into the mill of a foreign conflict?"

County Bills Digested for Legislators

Every assemblyman from Los Angeles county was handed a digest of all bills affecting county government and county officials when the Legislature reconvened Monday morning, so that they might be familiar with all matters to be voted on this session. While the two bills that will have the effect of validating the county's tax levies from 1933-34 are of most importance, there are a number of others that the county's assemblymen will be required to pass on, according to Harold W. Kennedy, deputy county counsel who prepared the digest and who is legal adviser to the county's assemblymen and to one senator, Robert W. Kenny.
