By-Products Coke Ovens In Utah Supply Fuel for Big Steel Plant

Coke was produced last Tuesday for the first time in the by-products coke ovens at Geneva, Utah, according to officials of Geneva Steel Co., U.S. Steel subsidiary. This is the initial phase of operations at the $180,000,000 steel plant near Provo, designed to supply ship plates for the West coast shipbuilding program.

It was in April, 1942, that the 1600-acre plant site was cleared of small farm buildings which dotted the area. Construction was undertaken at the request of Defense Plant Corp. by Columbia Steel Co., West coast subsidiary of U. S. Steel. In August of this year, Geneva Steel Co., a newly formed U.S. Steel subsidiary, contracted with Defense Plant Corp. to operate this great war plant for the duration without profit or fee.

To supply coal for coking purposes, which in turn will supply coke and other fuels for the Geneva Steel plant, the Geneva mine in Southeastern Utah was developed and is now shipping coal to Geneva's by-products coke plant.

Process Explained Coke is made by heating crushed coal in the air-tight ovens from 17 to 19 hours at temperatures ranging up to 2,000 degrees Fahrenheit. During the heating process the volatile constituents of the coal are driven off in the form of gases. These gases, though, don't "go up in smoke." They are reclaimed as by-products such as gas for fuel purposes, coal tar, ammonium sulphate, benzol and others. The residue, which is largely carbon, is the coke. It is removed from the ovens, cooled, graded according to size and is then ready for use in the blast furnaces. There are four batteries of coke ovens at Geneva, 63 in each battery. One of these batteries is now in production. The next major step in operations expected to be taken during the current month will be the production of pig iron in the first of three blast furnaces. Following this, the first three of nine open hearth furnaces will go into service for the production of steel ingots. Finally, upon completion of shipment and erection of the required facilities, the rolling mills will begin to turn out war critical ship plates.

When the Geneva plant swings into full operation it will produce approximately 1,200,000 tons of steel ingots annually. Overheating of the engine, as shown on the temperature gauge, is usually caused by a clogged radiator or faulty thermostat, warns the emergency service department of the Automobile Club of Southern California. Other causes are: need of water, radiator fan not running, improper valve or ignition timing, too-lean a carburetor adjustment or too little oil.
