Health Facts

By THE LOS ANGELES COUNTY MEDICAL ASS'N
Ringworm of the feet, scalp, the body and the nails are diseases caused by fungus. The most common is ringworm of the feet generally known as athlete's foot.

These four diseases are more annoying than dangerous. They are serious only when breaks in the skin occur, allowing infections to enter. However, all of them need prompt medical treatment.

The symptoms of athlete's foot are increased soreness between the toes, scaling, itching and small blisters. As the disease becomes worse, there may be larger blisters and raw places, swelling and redness. Some severe cases look and feel like ivy poisoning.

To prevent the condition, the feet should be kept dry and free from soggy dead skin. During each bath, they should be soaped thoroughly, especially between the toes, then rinsed and dried well. A good dusting with talcum powder will help to keep them dry.

Ringworm of the scalp may cause a patch of hair to break off near the roots leaving a bald, mangy looking spot. If a child gets this infection, he should be taken to a doctor at once. The condition can be stubborn if allowed to continue, or made worse by wrong treatment. Scalp ringworm can be spread by brush or comb, hats or the barber's tools which he has failed to sterilize. A dog or cat with ringworm can transmit the disease to a person.

Children have ringworm of the body more frequently than adults. They get it by contact with an infected child or by handling cats or dogs with ringworm. This type of infection usually occurs on the face or neck but may appear on other parts of the body. The patches generally are ring or oval shaped, slightly raised, pink and scaly with a clear space in the center.

Need Proof

In law, the birth of a child is not recognized until proof of "living issue" is established. "Living issue" requires that the child be completely separated from its mother and that "evidence of independent life" be established, although the child may have lived but for an instant. On the other hand, an unborn child is regarded by law as an individual person — and may inherit property. On this paradox, highly controversial legal actions have hung in the balance.
