School Principal Attends Aviation Education Confab

Charles Crecelius, principal of Fern and Greenwood schools, is presently in Washington, D.C., attending the second Aviation Education Leadership Institute, which ends tomorrow.

Mr. Crecelius is one of 30 educational and civic leaders selected to attend the Institute, which is being supported jointly by the scheduled airlines, the aircraft manufacturers, and the Port of New York Authority. The Civil Aeronautics Administration of the U. S. Department of Commerce will direct the Institute while the program will be ordinated by the National Aviation Council.

The purpose of the Institute is twofold, (a) to acquaint education and community leaders with the problems of aviation in relation to school functions and to community development and welfare; and (b) to assist school and community leaders in the planning of courses of action toward the solution of the social, economic and civic problems posed by aviation.

Those attending the five-day meeting will hear top officials from the aviation industry, Government and the military service discuss a wide variety of aviation subjects. The group will visit military and civil aviation installations including the Quantico Marine Corps Air Station, Fort Belvoir, Andrews Air Force Base, the Civil Aeronautics Administration air traffic control and Weather Bureau facilities at Washington National Airport, airline maintenance operations and an aircraft factory.
