

Unused Clothing Needed By Local Salvation Army

How out-of-use articles in local homes can provide new hope for homeless and handicapped men was explained this week by Brig. Ranson D. Gifford, manager of the Salvation Army Social Service Center which serves this area.

Making an appeal for heavy clothing to meet needs this winter, Brig. Gifford pointed out that reconditioning of articles in the center's workshops make possible a social rehabilitation program which aids hundreds of men.

He cited the case of a man he called "Bill" to show how the center's program helps. The future was bright for Bill when he was graduated from college. He obtained a good job with a firm in his home town, and in two years was well established.

While attending social functions Bill began to drink occasionally. Within a year he was coming to the office under the influence of liquor. When this continued, he was discharged. Drink and wanderlust made him a confirmed alcoholic, but after several years he realized his condition and went to the Salvation Army to seek sympathy and understanding.

Bill was admitted to the local center and put to work. He made a highly creditable showing on every work assignment. Now he is well on the way back and is preparing himself to take a place again in the business world. He hopes to be reunited with his family.

Brig. Gifford said castoff articles donated last year provided thousands of hours of occupational therapy, meals, lodgings and financial assistance to needy and handicapped persons.

He reported that in addition to winter clothing, the center needs shoes, furniture, bedding, dishes, toys, stoves, radios, appliances, tricycles, bicycles, rags and miscellaneous items to continue its program. A telephone call to FAirfax 8-1635 will bring a Red Shield truck to collect donations.
