Reflections

By J. HUGH SHERFEY, JR.

PRINTING, AS AN ART

The Oath of a Free Man was the first book published in America.

John Harvard left a legacy of 800 books and 780 pounds to a struggling college to promote printing of books and found a library. In 1638 a printing press was unloaded at Boston, the 780 pounds was tapped and the Printing Art was established.

This newspaper, the books and magazines on your shelves are descendants of Jesse Glover's first printing press. In spite of radio, television and telephones, communication would be a sorry, ineffectual affair without our printing presses.

Printing is an indispensable art, touches more people, in more ways than anything else in our economy.
