The Navaho missile's supersonic test vehicle

X-10 brings home the secrets of missile flight

The Air Force's NAVARO intercontinental strategic missile is near reality. How near is veiled in secrecy. But we can tell you that it checks out as one of America's mightiest weapons in the struggle for peace.

North American's Missile Development Division designed the X-10 as a test missile for the NAVARO. The X-10 flies at supersonic speeds, powered by two Westinghouse J-40-1 turbojet engines. It is guided throughout its flight by remote control... brought home to land on its tricycle gear. By using the X-10 as a flight-test vehicle for the NAVARO, North American has made tremendous defense-dollar savings and—more important—has gained precious time in the race for missile supremacy.

The NAVARO differs from ballistic missiles, which are propelled into outer space and then curve earthward in a free-falling trajectory. It is constantly guided throughout its flight by self-contained automatic control systems... cruises within the earth's atmosphere at several times the speed of sound. Bulls-eye accurate, it is well-nigh invulnerable to interception.

North American is the only company that is working on all phases of missile work. The NAVARO's weapons system is being developed by the Missile Development Division in Downey, its guidance and control systems by the Autonetics Division in Downey, and the large, liquid-propellant rocket engines that will boost it to flying speed by the Rocketdyne Division in Canoga Park. Each division is also working on several other missile projects.

NORTH AMERICAN HAS BUILT MORE AIRPLANES THAN ANY OTHER COMPANY IN THE WORLD

Pilot's "Diary": Over 4,000 NADAR units have been delivered to the Air Force by North American's Autonetics Division. The airborne magnetic recorder (above) lets the pilot check his marksmanship on the NADAR's oscilloscope (below) after a rocket-firing mission. Autonetics is currently completing the move into its new air-conditioned headquarters on Imperial Highway, Downey.

Power From The Atom. Playing a leading role in the Atomic Energy Commission program to develop economical power from nuclear energy is North American's Autonetics International Division in California, where work is underway on the Sodium Reactor Experiment. Nuclear heat from the SRE will be used to make steam, which will drive turbo-generators installed by the Southern California Edison Company to produce electricity.

Supersonic Wet Nurse. The "buddy system" of flight refueling extends the range of North American's famous Super Sabres, America's first operational supersonic fighters. These F-100's are built by the men and women of the Los Angeles Division. They set an all-time Suggestion Award record in 1956, receiving 8,160 checks totaling $191,135 for ideas that stretch the taxpayer's defense dollar.
