Attendance Map Keeps Pace As School Enrollment Grows

Just a few years ago, the Torrance Unified School District's official attendance map could be carried easily under one arm.

However, the growth of the enrollment in local schools has forced an increase in the size of the map until the 1959 version requires two men to carry it.

The five by nine foot map contains 23,000 pins which show the home of each child enrolled in Torrance schools. It is used extensively to help officials determine attendance boundaries, set up bus transportation schedules, predict future enrollments, and determine future needs of the schools.

While they are compiling the map, officials also double-check the residences of students here on permit from some other district or area.

When the map was first compiled, there were only about 2000 students and the work could be done by one person. The first map was only about one-fourth the size of the present one.

As years passed and enrollment increased, the size of the maps had to be increased to hold the pins. Several people require about two weeks to complete the job now.
