by Ann Landers

"I Witnessed a Long Kiss at the Door"

Dear Ann: We are an average American family in a town of great wealth, although we are in modest circumstances. The problem is our 15-year-old Jennie. She's pretty, a fair student, but not in "the clique" as we don't belong to the country club. She has a few boy friends but is always home before dark as the fellows have only junior driving licenses.

Recently Jennie was out with a fellow she described as "a far-out jerk." When he brought her to the door I witnessed a long kiss at the door. I was shocked. It was 4:00 p.m.

When I questioned her she started with the coldness of an experienced gold-digger that she didn't care about ANY boy but she enjoyed leading them on until she got a ring or some token of affection for her collection. Then she bouced them.

I don't think it's fair for her to mislead these poor characters. Also, I worry about such a tough, mercenary attitude in a young girl. Your advice will be welcome. — SCARSDALE MOTHER

Dear Scarsdale Mother: Most adolescents are eager for evidence that they can capture the male animal in large numbers. When Jennie grows up she's learn that one nice guy is worth 40 "far-out jerks."

Let us hope your Madame Pompadour in bobby socks develops some personal integrity before the word gets around the track that she's a "collector." The fellows worth dating will flee her as the plague if they discover she's merely trying to add scalps to her belt.

Dear Ann: We've been married six months and are having serious trouble. At least I think it's serious. My husband says if this appears in your column he'll laugh himself sick because it's all so "silly."

Three months ago he got out of the Air Force. He hadn't been home a week when a few of his buddies started to drop in.

It was casual at first, but now there isn't a day or an evening when we don't have somebody here for lunch or supper. They come in the morning and sometimes they even spend the night with us. I'm getting tired of running a free hotel for ex-service men.

Do you think I'm selfish to want my husband to myself once in a while? If I need a shaking up I'll be happy to take it. —NERVOUS WRECK

Dear Nervous: It's nice to be hospitable but when the home becomes a free flop house and the wife a short-order cook, love flies out the window.

Tell your husband to put his buddies on an "invitation only" basis. Decide together how many nights you'll turn your place into a USO Center. (Two is a suggested limit.) Since YOU are the one who must shop for food, cook and clean up the barracks you have the right to blow the whistle on unlimited free-loading.

Dear Ann Landers: I'm going on 17 years old and every girl I know shaves her legs but me. My father came from Europe and he says the most fashionable ladies over there don't bother with such foolishness.

How can I make him see that I'm self-conscious about this? From the knees down I look like a baboon. Please help me, Ann. A big party is coming up and I want to look my best. —ASHAMED

Dear Ashamed: Ask your gym teacher to write a note to your father. It may help. In many European countries young children drink wine with meals instead of water. Customs vary according to the country. In America a well-groomed woman wouldn't think of appearing in public with hairy legs. Good luck.
