YOUR PROBLEMS

by Ann Landers

"Please Show Her This Column . . ."

Dear Ann: I am a sixteen year old high school junior who needs some advice from an expert.

I worked all summer, hoping to save enough money to buy some clothes, and maybe take out a girl once in awhile. Well, my mother took my whole paycheck and gave me back just enough for carfare and lunch. When I told you I didn't have one extra penny in my pocket I am not exaggerating. Also, she wouldn't give me any money to take a girl to a movie all summer. She said it wasn't necessary.

I now have a job working after school and she is starting the same thing over again. I am thinking about quitting my job so I'll have an excuse to be broke. The girls say there must be something wrong with a guy who can't even buy a Coke.

How about this?—BROKE Dear Broke: I hate to tell a fellow his mother is being unfair but I must in this case. Even if your mother is desperately hard up, she should allow you to keep a small amount of your earnings.

If, for example, you are making $20 a week, you should be able to keep $5 to spend as you wish. Please show her this column, and I hope it helps.

Dear Ann Landers: Ten years ago I was so madly in love with Frank that I went against my parents' wishes and converted to Frank's religion so we could be married. I also promised to rear the children in his faith.

We have six lovely children and I go to church regularly. Frank, however, stopped going to church two years ago and I can't get him to budge. He used to be devoutly religious and I can't figure it out. Please tell me what I can do? Would it help if I won't go to church any more unless he goes with me?—MAGGIE

Dear Maggie: You made a promise.—now stick with it. Frank is probably feeling guilty about something. Ask your clergyman to speak to him. If he was once "very religious" there may be a chance that the spark can be rekindled.

Dear Ann Landers: This letter is being written by two 15-year-old girls who just returned from a double date. We both admit our guilt. Even on a double date we necked.

We are going steadily (but not steady) with these two wonderful fellows and we need some advice on how to keep things under control. Please don't misunderstand. We are not in any danger of losing our heads completely, we just want to be able to keep it down to a kiss or two. Thank you.—GUILTY ONES

Dear Guilty: There's nothing like bright lights and planned
