Senator Urges Four-Year Study Of Defense Department Buying

Sen. Clair Engle has urged the Defense Department to initiate a four-year study of defense procurement requirements for the purpose of gauging long-range effects on California and other key defense production areas. The California Senator asserted that if the Defense Department "can project with some certainty the general direction of defense procurement over a four-year period rather than from year to year, as has been the case in the past, it will be helpful both to the Defense Department and to the States involved." "Rapid technological changes mean drastic changes in defense procurement in short periods of time with severe effects on communities heavily engaged in defense work," he said. SENATOR ENGLE explained that the problem is particularly acute in San Diego, Los Angeles, San Francisco and other California communities. "If industry and the communities involved are to adjust as necessary and if they are to continue to be prepared to respond immediately to the nation's defense needs, it is of great importance that they be able to look and plan ahead," he said. Senator Engle said he outlined these points in a formal request to Deputy Secretary of Defense Roswell L. Gilpatric that the Defense Department initiate a four-year study of defense procurement requirements. "I think it is quite clear that California and the several other areas most vitally affected have solid grounds for requesting a long-range projection of defense procurement plans." Senator Engle said that in addition to his formal request for the long-range projection he has also discussed the proposal with Deputy Secretary Gilpatric.
