Role of Boy Scouts in Building Nation Told

It took more than one kind of strength to build the United States of America.

In the beginning and for a long time afterward, it took physical stamina. Strong arms to clean the forest and plow the soil, keen eyes to sight along musket barrels at Redcoats, rugged constitutions to ram the frontier into the heart of the wilderness.

It took strength of mind to produce the Declaration of Independence as Jefferson did, to inspire humble men to fight for it as Thomas Paine did, and to make it stick as Washington did.

Most of all, to raise this nation it took strength of character. It took character to survive that first winter at Plymouth Rock and that other winter at Valley Forge.

It took character to pack your things into a rickety wagon and push off into a land of vague promise and specific terror. Character to tell a nation that slavery is wrong. Character to say that might is not the same as right.

Because character is needed more than ever, the Boy Scouts of America is concerned more than ever about the building of strong character in boys.

They want to help guarantee that the builders of America in this age of atoms and space may be as strong as the builders of America at its birth.

My Neighbors

"This guy's signals are all too obvious!"

"Strengthen America—Character Counts" is the banner under which the four-month recruiting and character crusade of the Los Angeles Area Council, Boy Scouts of America will march.

The character crusade seeks not only to enroll more boys and leaders in Scouting... but also to inculcate them with the same physical stamina, strength of mind, and strength of character which were so necessary for the building of America, and are now so necessary for the dynamic preservation of our country.
