Camp Fire Girls Help With Christmas Seals

Armed with bundles of Christmas Seal posters, window signs, and counter cards, members of Camp Fire Girls, local leaders of the 1962 Christmas Seal drive, are now distributing their materials in more than 100 stores and offices in Torrance.

Mrs. Eileen O'Brien, director of social services, Harbor General Hospital, and Christmas Seal chairman for the Harbor area, reports that the Camp Fire Girls are among more than 100 service organizations in Los Angeles County aiding the Tuberculosis and Health Assn. of the county to reach its 1962 goal of $900,000. "Last year tuberculosis struck more than 2,000 county residents," Mrs. O'Brien said. "This number can be reduced through support of the current Christmas Seal campaign," she added.

Christmas seals have been mailed to more than 1,275,000 homes in the county. The holiday-colored display items that members of the Camp Fire Girls are placing in Torrance

Law In Action

A person may have his will say that no one shall contest its terms; but if anyone does, he gets only $1.00.

The reason for these terms is to make fights among the heirs unprofitable. It is a voids bickering.

But be careful of this clause: It may disinherit a person who otherwise may have "rightful" claim, or who may have been left out through oversight.

THUS THE California Supreme Court said that it still must see if a testator meant to disinherit certain relatives. A forgotten child or grandchild may still contest the will to show that the testator did not "really mean" to leave him out.

A beneficiary must sometimes choose between letting a will stand that may not have reflected the testator's wishes, and contesting it if he forfeits the legacy if he should lose his contest. A will should reflect the testator's intentions.

NO COURT should have to enforce a false will or one that fails to reflect his true intentions. Perhaps the testator was under some undue influence, or was not completely of sound mind.

A few courts have refused to apply the forfeiture rule strictly if there is good cause to contest the will such as a good faith claim that the will was forged or that there was a later will.

Some wills permit no challenge at all, and treat any challenge of the executor's actions, or dispute with a trustee, or the probate court as a "contest."

FULLY TO understand what the testator meant in his will, facts must be presented to the courts which often come out only if some one protests some action of the court or the executor.

The courts face a conflicting policy (1) of giving the testator freedom to dispose of his property, and (2) of getting the facts to the court. Courts try to strike a balance to protect both interests.
