Judge Urges Industry Aid For High School Training

Superior Court Judge Vincent S. Dalsimer in accepting reappointment to the Governor's Advisory Committee on Problems of Children and Youth Monday, said the committee would work to broaden high school participation in industry training programs.

Also an active member of the Southern California Industry Education Council, Judge Dalsimer said, "The Council and the Governor's Committee should encourage industry to cooperate with high schools in their training programs rather than concentrating only on college students."

The Judge said that both groups should study the need for high school industry training programs and should suggest means of implementing them.

"Such training programs not only would give many high school students, who aren't going to college, positive post-graduate goals but also could encourage potential drop-outs to stay and earn their high school diplomas," said Judge Dalsimer. He is a former juvenile court judge and deputy attorney general and is prominently mentioned as a candidate for Los Angeles County District Attorney.
