YOUR PROBLEMS

by Ann Landers

'Let Bloomin' Phone Ring . . .'

Dear Ann Landers: I have read your column for almost eight years and have learned a lot from it. Because of you I no longer feel guilty about refusing to answer the doorbell when the neighborhood pest shows up at 9:30 a.m. with her 3-year-old—full of conversation which used to last through lunch.

Now I have another problem. Does a person have the right NOT to answer the telephone if she doesn't feel like talking, or it is inconvenient?

A certain relative who is a notorious yakker telephones me at approximately the same time every morning. She has tied me up for as long as 45 minutes with petty gossip and foolish chatter. I decided to just let the phone ring. I think she is wise. Am I wrong to do this?—WILL POWER

Dear Will: The person who puts in the call does so at HER convenience. Just because she is willing, able and ready to gab is no sign you have to be on deck to listen. If you don't feel like talking—or listening—just let the bloomin' thing ring.

Dear Ann Landers: Our daughter will be 14 late this summer and we do not allow her to date. Both my husband and I are avid readers of your column and we are standing firm on this dating business until Margo gets to high school, which is what you recommend.

The problem is this: Margo has numerous friends, both boys and girls. She receives a good many telephone calls and both boys and girls seem to be visiting her frequently.

Shall we discourage the boys from calling or coming to the house? My husband or I are always present so the children are well chaperoned.

We don't want to be too strict with our daughter but we don't want to go to the other extreme either. Where is the sensible middle ground? Thank you.

—PONCA CITY

Dear Ponca: You are wise to seek the middle ground and I believe it's where you are at the moment.

Keep saying no to dating until Margo is in high school, but permit boys to telephone and come to the house to visit. She won't feel deprived, yet she won't be dating.

My hat is off to you for having enough sense to insist on remaining in the driver's seat. These days too many parents are collapsable.

Dear Ann Landers: My problem is not one on which the world will rise or fall but it has caused me endless consternation and I need help.

About four months ago I began to date a very nice man who operates a small business near my place of employment. He invited me out and I ac-
