

They Really Looked Dandy But Sure Weren't Candy

All that glistens is not gold, and all pretty little orange pills which taste well aren't necessarily candy.

That's what six South Torrance youngsters found out in a hurry Saturday morning upon being rushed to their family physician after eating some "candy" which they found in a discarded bottle.

The "candy" was nothing less than a digitalis derivative for heart patients. The most any youngster took was three pills. Eight to 10 pills could have proved fatal, the physician informed them and their parents.

"We had the scare of our lives when we saw what the children had taken," Mrs. Don Troutman of 2616 Dalemead, who discovered what had happened, said.

"We rushed them to a doctor right away," Mrs. John P. Jones of 2610 Dalemead added, "and he confined them to their beds after finding out how much each of them had taken. Fortunately there were no ill after-effects. I certainly hope that this incident will warn people against discarding medicine where children might get at it."
