It's A Wise Parent

A Common Sense Approach to Your Child

By Janice Coe

Dear Miss Coe,

Our 16' year old boy has an allowance, and he makes a little money doing odd jobs in his spare time.

He says that an average date with a girl, just a show and refreshments, costs him at least ten dollars! He says that's the only way the fellows can make a good impression on girls.

Isn't that too much for a teen-ager to spend? Also, should parents be expected to finance this, or should he cut his dates down to suit his income?

Mrs. G. T.

Dear Mrs. G. T.

Tell sonny that trying to make an impression often causes a severe depression . . . in the wallet!

There are other ways to dating fun besides always paying through the nose for canned entertainment. Not only teenagers, but adults too would benefit by remembering the kick you can get out of roller skating and hot dogs, walking and a soda, ice skating and hot chocolate, record sessions and cokes, or even museum trotting and sandwiches in the park.

And the girl who thinks more of the place than of the date is never worth going into debt over.

Janice Coe will be happy to answer all questions from parents or youth. Address letters care of this paper.
