Watering April showers may come your way, but in California you can never count on them. In southern California, especially, April is a month to start watering seriously. Deep watering is one way to make a plan's roots go down and down so that they are less susceptible to the summer drought when it comes. Camellias and Azaleas, of course, are shallow rooted and deep watering will do no good. These are wisely mulched with peat moss and steer manure to conserve moisture.
