

YORTY TELLS PROGRESS ON VETERANS' FACILITY

Development of a $20 million Veterans Administration Hospital facility near the Los Angeles County General Hospital came a step closer today according to Los Angeles Mayor Sam Yorty.

A major obstacle to development of the veterans medical facility, one which could mean a $10 million annual payroll for East Los Angeles, is the necessity of relocating an armory now on part of the proposed hospital site.

Mayor Yorty said representatives of his office, interested city departments and the federal government have just surveyed possible alternate armory sites and are nearing an agreement.

The survey has narrowed down to three acceptable sites, all within a mile of the present armory, Mayor Yorty declared.

The site now tentatively most acceptable to the Army, General Services Administration and the U.S. Corps of Engineers is one adjacent to Lincoln Heights school.

Two other possible sites still under active consideration are (1) property near Ascott Reservoir under jurisdiction of the Water and Power Department, and (2) land now occupied by an abandoned school under jurisdiction of the City Board of Education. Structures now on the latter site are being used only for administrative purposes.

Considerable sentiment exists for locating the armory on the Lincoln Heights School site because this property is now owned by the City of Los Angeles and is immediately available.

Robert L. Duncan, representative of the 6th Army, Presidio, San Francisco, California, said that the Department of Defense would probably make its final site selection decision within the next 30 days.

Mayor Yorty explained that the Veterans Admini-

GAS COMPANY OFFERS HELPFUL HINTS FOR WINTER FUEL USE

Winter may not officially be here but the United States Weather Bureau records for the past week indicate that it's definitely on its way.

Cold spells, namely those which occur for the most part during the evenings and early morning hours, mean time to warm residences.

To help its customers get the most from their natural gas service, Southern California Gas Company today offered these "helpful hints."

1. When going to bed at night, turn thermostat or furnace control down. This will maintain a comfortable warmth without overheating. The body requires less outside heat for comfort during sleep.

2. Close the flue on fireplaces when it isn't in use. An open flue enables warm air to escape and can lower inside temperatures considerably.

3. Keep drapes drawn over large window areas at night in order that the heat won't dissipate quickly through the glass.

4. Make sure heating vents are closed in unoccupied rooms. No use expending fuel to heat areas where no one lives or works regularly.

5. If there is a roof-top-based air conditioning system, close the baffle during the cold season.

6. Make sure the filter on forced-air furnaces is clean.

A clogged up filter can impede the flow of warm air and make the job of heating more difficult and less efficient.

7. Repair all leaky water faucets before the cold weather continues to allow for maximum use of water heaters when they are most needed. Leaky faucets not only waste gas but water as well.

Southern California Gas Company points out that customers use from four to seven times more gas on a cold day during the winter. Water and space heating requirements are the main reasons for the increase. But gas is metered so customers pay only for what they use, according to a spokesman for the firm. Furthermore, gas bills do not go up as much as usage because the cost per unit decreases as more gas is used.
