

State Officials Preview Major Problem of 1965

By GEORGE W. NEILL, California Teachers Assn. A preview of major issues during the 1965 session of the State Legislature was revealed by Assembly Speaker Jesse M. Unruh (D-Inglewood) and Hale Champion, state director of finance, at the Dec. 5 "Conference on the Urban School Crisis" held in Los Angeles.

Both indicated that education—and how to pay for it—will again have high priority. Unruh said that any successful action to alleviate the urban crisis "will have to be a blend of local and state effort." On the local level, he urged a more efficient education effort through effective consolidation of local school districts.

But perhaps the "most meaningful policy instrument for the treatment of the urban disease," he added, "is direct state action through revised programs of state aid."

"IT IS THE poor, and especially the poor of minority groups, who are in need of the most intensive kind of education. Precisely because of cultural deprivation, urban schools are required (and rightly so in my opinion) to fill the role of a sort of substitute society, in a much more important sense than in other kinds of communities. The task of providing motivation to stay in school and motivation to learn—is formidable indeed," the Assembly Speaker said.

"It is not difficult," he continued, "to appreciate the need for a more intensive kind of teaching experience. Among other things, such needs would have to be met by smaller class sizes and the employment of teaching specialists of the highest quality.

Make no mistake! The kind of economic and social segregation which afflicts so many of our American cities today... is bound to be expensive. California is not immune! We pay for our sins one way or another."

Unruh said the following questions must be tackled by the Legislature: Shall we keep students in school until they are older? Shall we start them at a younger age? Are we making full enough use of our capital investment? Should the school day be lengthened?

CHAMPION clearly stated his unhappiness with the current property tax in California. He said it's too high, it's unfair, it causes great inequalities—and it has been a drag to school finance.

Combined with a downward adjustment of the property tax, Champion, who is Governor Brown's top finance man, suggested some new taxes for consideration: Raising the cigarette tax from the current three cents to eight cents; a local property transfer tax; removal of many exemptions (he said he finds it more and more difficult to see the reason for tax exemptions for veterans); a service sales tax; and even a cigarette tax. In addition, he repeated his suggestion of last year— withholding of state income tax. He said this would bring in an additional $60-$70 million per year. He also said it would catch the people who move into California for 12 months or so, benefit from our schools and other facilities, then leave without contributing to our tax resources.

Champion indicated that if these "reforms" were achieved, California would be in far better shape to tackle its challenging education problems.

Navy High School Graduate Program Offers Schooling

A wide selection of technical schools is now being offered to high school graduates entering the Navy under the High School Seaman Recruit (HSSR) program, Chief Vandorne E. Isaak, local Navy recruiter, has announced.

High school graduates are assured of the best training modern industry can provide in a Navy trade school, Chief Isaak said.

More than 60 career fields are open to successful applicants under HSSR program. Classification test scores and interviews are used to determine the specific interests and abilities of seamen recruits. Navy jobs to suit the outdoors man, the indoors man, or the mechanically oriented are available, Chief Isaak added. Young men interested in the HSSR program may contact Chief Isaak at the Navy Recruiting Station, 1520 Cravens Ave., or call him at FA 0-3141.

TB War Is Still Going on

By K. H. SUTHERLAND, M.D., County Health Officer

It was in the late 1940's and early 1950's that scientific breakthroughs in the treatment of tuberculosis seemed to give promise that in a few years the disease which had ravaged continents for centuries would be completely conquered.

In the past few years, however, statistics have confirmed what had been known by TB specialists—that the challenge of eradication is far more difficult than that of tuberculosis containment and control.

Tuberculosis presents a unique problem because it may be present within the human body as an organism not causing illness but quite capable of causing illness under suitable conditions.

ACCORDING to the United States Public Health Service, about 35 million people now living in this country have been infected at some time with the tubercle bacillus. This means that most of these people were exposed to TB germs and developed infections which were healed by their bodies without the appearance of any illness. When tuberculin tested, these persons are "positive."

The body process, in protecting itself from these primary infections, is actually to wall off the invading organisms, to imprison the germs in shell-like capsules. In some individuals, these capsules stay intact for life; in others the capsules may break down, sometimes after many years, and release the tuberculous organisms, still alive and virulent, to invade healthy tissue and cause disease.

The majority of new cases of tuberculosis today are not the result of recent infections, but rather of such breakdowns.

A MAINSTAY of the tuberculosis control effort for many years has been early detection of cases so that treatment may begin at a stage when the disease is most "curable." An annual physical examination, complete with chest X-ray, is still recommended for every adult and is especially important for those over the age of 40.

In Los Angeles County, case-finding through the X-raying of adults is not the only method of isolating the remaining pockets of tuberculosis within our communities. As a joint effort of the Tuberculosis and Health Association, the various school districts and the Los Angeles County Health Department, a special long-term project of tuberculin testing school children is being conducted.

THIS PROJECT, which began in 1962, involves skin testing 8th graders at a rate of 20 per cent of the children each year for five years. A similar five-year program is planned to follow the first. It is hoped that much valuable data on which to base other tuberculosis control measures will result from the school tuberculin testing project.

Help in the eradication of tuberculosis is everybody's business. No one is completely safe from TB until everyone is safe. A pamphlet containing information about the disease and what an individual should do to protect himself will be sent to anyone sending a written request to the Division of Public Health Education, Los Angeles County Health Department, 220 N. Broadway, L.A. 12.
