

East Coast in Line For New Disneyland

By REYNOLDS KNIGHT
Is a Disneyland headed for Dixieland?
There are signs that Disney has a Florida project in the making, possibly in the Orlando-Cape Kennedy area. Just what form it will take hasn't been revealed yet, but if it's anything like the one so successful in Anaheim, Calif., the East Coast will have a real attraction, but not necessarily along the same lines.

The present Disneyland continues to be a stellar attraction of the first magnitude. There are many who preferred it to the late World's Fair in New York.

The latter began to draw heavy crowds at the very first, but the two-year attendance was far below predictions. Some experts are convinced that there are several reasons why this country may never have large fairs again in the traditional mold. They foresee, instead, the possibility of more modest, more regional, expositions. These might draw considerable interest of regional business organizations unable and unwilling to take part in a grand-scale fair.

SHOPPERS AND DINERS
—In many cities there are business districts that have their ups and downs, and one of these is 14th Street in New York. For many years it was a thriving retailing area, but declined. Now it is on the threshold of a new residential and commercial boom, and returning to the area is F. W. Woolworth with a modern, block-deep store featuring high-fashion apparel, home furnishing items and "upgraded" merchandise mix. The new store will have a dining facility for nearly 300 persons, recalling to officials that the first Woolworth store opened in that area in 1900 introduced the first eating service ever offered by the company—a stand-up counter "to accommodate weary shoppers." Today, Woolworth serves food to an average of one million shoppers daily in nearly 2,000 stores in the United States and Canada. The company can feed 85,000 customers in one sitting, and the restaurant counters, if placed end to end, would stretch out for 32 miles.

BITS O' BUSINESS — Another new member of the billion-dollar club may be International Harvester, whose president sees sales reaching the ten-figure level in the fiscal year just ending. . . Annual Business Equipment Exposition in New York saw 95 new products introduced by 62 companies. Included were

South High Seniors Set Class Play

"Thurber's Carnival" has been selected for the South High Senior Class play, according to Ronald Childres, drama instructor and director of the production. "Thurber's Carnival" is a delightful series of comedy dramas which will provide a most enjoyable evening of entertainment," Childres said in announcing the selection. Students cast for roles in the play are Pamela Betus, Kathleen Edwards, Joy Ingalls, Marcia Mendelsohn, Kimbreth Turner, Jon Baker, Robert Capon, Lee Housekeeper, and Douglas Urban. The play will be performed twice, Dec. 3 and 4, in the South High cafeteria.

Commission To Consider Park Fences

Members of the city's Park and Recreation Commission will meet tonight at 8 o'clock in the council chambers at City Hall, 3031 Torrance Blvd. Only item on the agenda is a request for a $2,000 appropriation to provide fences at Guenser Park. Harry Van Bellehem, director of recreation, said the fences would replace a low fence at the park and is designed to provide protection to adjoining property from stray softballs.

RETAIL "LABORATORY"
—A unique "laboratory" has opened in a swank Kansas City suburb but no test tubes are in evidence. A luxurious specialty store with 21 shops under a single roof, Halls on the Plaza is actually a retail laboratory operated by Hallmark Cards to provide its own people with retail merchandising and consumer reaction. The greeting card manufacturer also operates the Hallmark Gallery on New York City's Fifth Avenue for similar reasons. The new midwest showcase offers not only Hallmark cards, gift wraps and party goods, but such prestige wares as fashions by Lily Pulitzer and Rudi Gernreich, Wedgwood, Minten and Rosenthal china, Boehm birds, Steuben glass, Baccarat and Lalique crystal and scores of other distinctive merchandise lines of outstanding quality. Initial response to the cluster of shops dealing in high-quality items has been extremely favorable, company officials said, and visitors have found it an "adventure in shopping." After all, not many shopping places have giant pairs of mahogany doors from Mexico crafted by a fifth generation cabinet maker, or white onyx arches, outlined in Italian white marble.
