less ground space than does the present plant, the major processing units will be served from a single control room with on-line computers tied right into the units, storage tanks and blending facilities to direct such operations as scheduling, blending and inventory control.

ACCORDING to the refinery manager, the new refinery will require a work force of about 525 employees, some 240 less than are employed at the existing refinery. No layoff of employees is anticipated inasmuch as normal attrition and the number of employees who will be eligible for early retirements when the new plant is completed in 1967 should be sufficient to account for the reduction in work force.

Contractors for the construction of Mobil's new Torrance refinery are Ralph M. Parsons Co., C. F. Braun Co. and Procon, Inc. Nenick estimated that the contractor's craft employment in building the new plant will reach a peak of some 3,000 men in about a year.
