Rabies Blamed In Dog's Death

The first rabid dog to be reported in Los Angeles County in more than five years has been diagnosed by laboratory test, according to Dr. G. A. Heidbreder, county health officer.

The dog, a 150-pound black male Great Dane, owned by Tim Corliss of Malibu, died Sept. 20, some six months after having attacked and killed a rabid skunk, Dr. Heidbreder said. Examination of brain tissue by the health department laboratory produced a positive finding for rabies.

"The dog is not known to have bitten any person or any other pet during the time when it could have transmitted the disease; however, if any person knows of such an encounter with this dog, the fact should be reported to the health department's Santa Monica Health Center at once," Dr. Heidbreder said.

HEALTH OFFICIALS feel certain that the rabies infection was a result of the animal's exposure to the rabid skunk in February, he said. The long incubation period in the development of the disease is attributed to the fact that the pet had been immunized two years prior to the exposure and re-vaccinated afterward.

"This is one of those very rare instances sometimes found in the use of any vaccine in which, given significant exposure to a highly virulent disease, the immune response in a particular individual may not be adequate to produce sufficient protection," Dr. Heidbreder said. "However, it must be emphasized, the reason we have had no rabies in dogs so long a period is that the law requires all dogs to be immunized against this disease. Prior to passage of the mandatory vaccination law, sometimes the annual total of rabid dogs here ran into the hundreds."

RABIES IS, and has been prevalent in wild life throughout the more rural areas of the county, notably in skunks and bats. Of the total of 16 rabid animals recorded in Los Angeles county so far this year, nine have been skunks, six bats.

"Residents of outlying areas should be alert to the danger of rabies in wild creatures," the health officer said. "Any wild animal that invades a residential neighborhood or allows itself to be approached or touched should be immediately suspected of being rabid, and the health department notified."
