Big Dome Under Way At College

Construction of the largest aluminum geodesic dome gymnasium in the United States is under way at Loma Linda University. The structure will bear the name "Dale Gentry Hall" recognizing the gift of a San Bernardino businessman last year which made its construction possible.

Fabricated and erected by Temcor of Torrance, the dome will span 160 feet, with a floor area of 20,300 square feet and a surface area of 24,400 square feet. It will rise nearly 40 feet at its highest point.

Temcor, which holds an exclusive license by Kaiser Aluminum and Chemical Corp. as fabricator-erector of the dome system, has manufactured and erected stressed-skin domes throughout the world. Recent Temcor domes have been built for a church in Florida, the main exhibit hall at Alaska's Centennial Exposition, a theater in Reno, and a college gymnasium in Virginia.

Merrill taught at the college part-time prior to his appointment as dean July 1. Merrill takes over from Dr. Wallace Cohen, who is now vice-president of instruction at the college.

New instructors include Harold Cashin, Richard Joliff, Gus Shaleford and Mrs. Midori Watanabe.

CASHIN will teach political science and holds both a master's and a doctorate from USC. He has taught in secondary schools in the South Bay area for five years and has three years of college teaching experience.

Joliff, who will teach sociology, has come to El Camino after teaching for four years at Yorba Linda Junior High School. He earned his master's degree at USC.

SHACKELFORD, economics instructor, earned his degrees at UCLA and taught at the College of the Sequoias in the San Joaquin Valley.

Mrs. Watanabe, who will teach psychology, is presently working on her doctorate degree at USC. She received her master's from Columbia University and has taught at elementary and junior high schools for 12 years in the Los Angeles City Schools systems.
