

COLLEGE REPORT

By ROBERT M. BERSI

Assistant to the President
California State College, Dominguez Hills

The most successful discussion groups participating in the California State College, Dominguez Hills, Community Conference on Environmental Problems and Urban Design and Beautification apparently were those which stimulated participants to re-evaluate their general assumptions.

- suggested means of confronting specific problems.
- involved a large number of members in exchanges of opinion, and
- "stayed on the track," that is, concerned themselves with the topic.

Some typical comments on the discussion groups were: "I think the conference came off very well on the whole—primarily because of the discussion group format... the main result was to initiate some communication."

"Discussion groups were excellent and should receive more time."

"I especially appreciated the small discussion groups, during which the average person had an opportunity to air his view in agreement with or in contrast to the professional speakers."

PARTICIPANTS in the conference considered the major speakers on the program to have been on the whole well chosen and stimulating. The best received speakers were those who:

- presented examples of how other cities or regions in the United States had approached specific problems,
- used visual or graphic aids to vividly demonstrate their arguments, or
- spoke directly and frankly to listeners and each other.

"The speakers were excellent. I felt only one did not contribute anything for our city group."

"Have more angry, outspoken, acid speakers such as Temko. His type may shock people, but they are stimulated."

"There was diversity in the speakers' points of view

...eons were very well received. Additionally, various respondents commented on the banquet food and speakers, the physical facilities, and the weather. About twenty added a final salutation, such as "outstanding," "good attempt," or "well done." Some volunteered their time and advice for future activities in these areas. Unquestionably, the major accomplishment of the conference was to inaugurate constructive cooperation between California State College, Dominguez Hills, and the southwest Los Angeles communities in confronting common environmental concerns. Almost without exception, conference participants agreed that it was a successful "ice-breaker," and that follow-up meetings of a similar nature should be organized. As one participant put it: "There is a definite need for a follow-up conference. In fact, more conferences or meetings, I feel, are necessary. These meetings will give the numerous local agency members, not limited to the major planners, the opportunity to discuss local problems with the citizens. As the college becomes more established, I would like to see this campus become the meeting place for all interested citizens and members of professions related to urban problems, in the South Bay area, to exchange views and study."
